I did it since I was a student, when every time I read about something or started something new, I would remember exactly what I read, however, in the course of time, most of the notes became useless, so I decided to organize my notes on my phone. I did it in a way that I could later read them offline, and only then I ordered them in the archive. I wasn't thinking that will become an important habit to keep till my retirement. I realized the importance of notes, and in the course of time, my system evolved from a small set of notes to several smaller archives on various storage devices. I also started using the cloud to store my notes, as I've found a better way to organize my notes than my desktop. That was when I've came across the idea of password manager, and finally when I've found Bytessence Password Manager, I decided to try it out. I like the integration of clicking on an email, receiving a calendar invite, or opening a task in my calendar to open the password vault. The main feature of the application is putting containers, where you could create profiles for your various accounts. The idea is to keep all your Password manager software saves passwords in a unique database that does not contain any personal information. No IP address is stored, no phone number, no credit card information, and no location. Passwords are protected by a master password. Your main secret is safe! First it looks like the Windows password manager: you have your favorite account manager, which you can handle manually or automatically by password prompts. But it's not the same thing, because by default, passwords are encrypted before writing to the database. As an additional security, the PassKeeper generates strong passwords. The passwords are stored in the database in an encrypted form. So you can open them from any computer without any copy of the encrypted data.
