Functional coupling between the molecular chaperone protein heat shock cognate 70 and replication protein A during reactivation of SV40-transformed cells. Chaperone proteins play a major role in the folding and assembly of newly synthesized proteins and are thereby essential for cell viability. Here, we used a fluorescence resonance energy transfer (FRET) assay to directly monitor physical interactions between the molecular chaperone heat shock cognate 70 (Hsc70) and replication protein A (RPA) in vivo, and to measure the effect of the two proteins on SV40 DNA replication. It was found that interactions between Hsc70 and RPA occur at the sites of origin DNA replication in SV40-transformed cells. The FRET efficiency was elevated in the presence of Hsc70 and the helper proteins RPA and proliferating cell nuclear antigen and reduced after competition with RNA or protein synthesis. Thus, Hsc70 binds to and stimulates the processivity of RPA during SV40 replication. Valve revealed on Twitter last night a new Steam Wallet update, showing off a new icon for payments.
